

Lilidorei – Alnwick Gardens

Lilidorei, pronounced Lilydory (to rhyme with story), is a brand-new fantasy village play area located at The Alnwick Gardens in Northumberland containing the world's largest play structure. The £15 million project was the brainchild of the Duchess of Northumberland and has been constructed using natural materials making it completely plastic free. Nestled in a woodland clearing, the village is home to elves, trolls, fairies and goblins, their houses surrounding Elfwin Drin Castle, which contains six slides, rope bridges and wire domes. Once through the medieval style gate entrance, the footpaths, laid with LeesonBound, give the first taste of the magical details to come. The hard-wearing resin mixes a golden pea aggregate with glow stones and is finished with a sprinkle of glitter on top, meaning the footpaths will sparkle by day and by night. Everything is meticulously planned to delight children and adults alike and create a magical wonderland full of stories and adventure.
